

not guilty. On next Tuesday they will appear with Becker, when their counsel will make the usual motions for permission to inspect the Grand Jury minutes and other privileges. It is expected that Mr. McIntyre will begin an attack on the indictment.

The arrangement of the prisoners followed the inquiry. Coroner Feinberg called that formally to order at 11 o'clock. The jury, of which Daniel Friedman was foreman, was on hand and the Coroner briefly explained the purpose of the inquiry. Assistant District Attorney Rubin then addressed the jury.

"Coming to the fact that the Grand Jury has already taken action in regard to the persons responsible for the killing of Herman Rosenthal," said Mr. Rubin, "you will not be called upon to fix the responsibility. Your only function now is to establish the cause of death, and I shall present evidence bearing upon that aspect of the case."

Coroner's Physician Schultz, who performed the autopsy, was the first witness. He testified to finding two bullet wounds, one in the brain, the other in the jaw and tongue. The bullet wound in the brain was the cause of death.

"Did you recover any of the bullets?" asked Coroner Feinberg. "The bullet in the brain was recovered intact," replied Dr. Schultz. "It was of .32 calibre."

Dr. Schultz said the identification of the body of Rosenthal was made by Policeman Daniel Brady, who had a fixed post at Forty-third street and Broadway. Foreman Friedman of the jury asked how the identification was made.

COULD NOT CLASS SIZE OF SECOND BULLET.

Dr. Schultz said that Brady identified the body as that which had been lying on the sidewalk in front of the Metropole after the shooting. In answer to the question put by a juror, Dr. Schultz said that the bullet he recovered from the law was splintered and its calibre could not be determined.

Policeman Brady testified that he heard four shots, but did not see the shooting. When he reached the scene the body of Rosenthal was lying on the sidewalk.

Thomas Smith, head waiter of the Metropole, told of seeing Rosenthal sitting at a table prior to the shooting, of hearing shots and of going out and seeing Rosenthal's body. John Eastland, a waiter, told of running to the door after hearing the shots, seeing the body of Rosenthal and noting a man in a brown suit running away. He did not see any revolver.

Policeman William Fife, who was off duty and in the Metropole at the time of the shooting, told of hearing the shots and rushing to the street with his revolver in his hand. Previous to the shooting, he said, about ten minutes before the shooting, he saw a man named "Bridgie" Webber, proprietor of the Garden restaurant, and a man named Eddie Hayes.

Fife told how he had been unable to get any information from anybody immediately after the shooting, and how he and other policemen vainly pursued the gray touring car. He said that on his return from the chase he saw Webber near the scene of the shooting talking to Jimmy Thompson, proprietor of the Garden restaurant, and a man named Eddie Hayes.

Fife was cross-examined by Aaron J. Levy, counsel for the indicted chauffeur, William Shapiro, who got from the policeman that he did not see the driver of the car.

LIBBY RELEASED, TELLS OF "AMAZING IDENTIFICATION."

Mr. Levy spent some time in an effort to get Fife to admit that he had been told the murderer of Rosenthal had escaped from the scene in another automobile than that driven by Levy's client, Shapiro. Fife said he had heard there was another automobile and promised to give the District Attorney the names of his informants on that point.

Shapiro, who has confessed that he drove the car in which the four murderers escaped, the cross-examination of Mr. Levy did not change the position of his client. Fife's testimony closed the inquiry and the jury returned a verdict that Rosenthal came to his death at the hands of persons unknown.

Coroner Feinberg then announced that he had been requested by the District Attorney to discharge Louis Libby, who shares with Shapiro the ownership of the gray touring car. Libby was accordingly released from custody. He had been under arrest since a few hours after the murder.

As soon as he was free Libby began to talk. He made a statement as to happenings in the West Forty-seventh street station following his arrest which adds more confirmation to the charge of the District Attorney that the police work in the case has been either stupid or not "on the level."

"I didn't know anything about the car being rented for the night of July 17," said Libby. "That happened after my work was done and I had gone home."

"I was in bed when detectives came and yanked me out and hustled me into my oily, greasy working clothes. They took me first to the garage and then to the Forty-seventh street station house. I didn't know what it was all about until they told me Herman Rosenthal had been killed, and even then I didn't know how the car figured in it. I told the policeman that the car had been in the garage since I put it there, and so far as I know, that was the truth."

"MAN WHO FIRED THE SHOTS," DOUGHERTY SAID.

"When we got to the station house Commissioner Dougherty and Inspector Hughes were there. Both were greatly excited. The room was full of people. Dougherty and Hughes made a rush for me."

"Here's the man now," said Dougherty. "Put him in line."

"They put me in line with a dozen or more well dressed men. I was the only one that had on greasy working clothes. Then Dougherty called two persons, a man and a boy in a bellhop's uniform. Both these persons had been in the room and had seen me brought in and placed in line."

"The man walked up to me and picked me out. The boy hung back, but Dougherty shoved him forward, telling him to touch me—that I was the right party. Then the boy pointed me out."

"These men identify you as the man who fired the shots," said Dougherty.

"Yes," said Hughes, "we've got you and I'll see that you're sent away."

"Then they rushed me down to Police

Headquarters and kept me there two days before I could get word to anybody. As I was being taken from Headquarters to the Criminal Courts Building, on the second day, I asked a detective to please telephone to Assemblyman Aaron Levy and ask him to come and see me. That is the way I got Mr. Levy for my lawyer.

Libby, as soon as he was discharged, was immediately subpoenaed by the District Attorney to appear before the Grand Jury.

GANGSTERS SWARM ABOUT COURT GUARDED BY POLICE.

The combination of inquest, arraignment and Grand Jury session served to attract an immense crowd to the Criminal Courts Building. All the streets around the structure were jammed with the curious, and the congestion was especially heavy in front of the Tombs and in the street between the Tombs and the Criminal Courts Building, over which passes the Bridge of Sighs.

Special details of policemen, under command of Capt. Tierney of the Elizabeth street station, kept traffic open and cleared the way to the doors of the Criminal Courts Building. In the corridor court officers and detectives in plain clothes had all they could do to keep aways of eager persons from storming the doors of the court rooms.

In the crowds were many who bore the unmistakable marks of east side gang members. There were also many gamblers and frequenters of underworld resorts—friends of some of the prisoners in the case. Admission to the inquest was by ticket, and only those having business in the court room were admitted when the five men under indictment were arraigned for pleading before Judge Mulqueen.

ROSE FEARS ASSASSIN WHILE OUT OF PRISON.

Of all the prisoners who appeared in the different court proceedings today, either as witnesses or defendants, the only one who betrayed fear and apprehension was "Jack Rose," the chief informer. The reports that Rose expects to be assassinated were fully confirmed by his demeanor while he was in the public eye today.

Obviously Rose is so frightened that he is physically ill, as well as mentally tormented. He was a haggard, furtive figure in the developments of today, his shining bald head and naturally pasty features emphasizing his unhealthy pallor. The eyes of Rose were never still. They shifted with the rapidity of light from place to place, either as witnesses or defendants, the only one who betrayed fear and apprehension was "Jack Rose," the chief informer.

Rose's fear was first betrayed to the outside world when, with "Bridgie" Webber and Harry Vallon, he stepped out of the West Side prison to board a van for the trip to the Criminal Courts Building, where his presence was demanded at the Coroner's inquest. Webber, with his clothing creased to the minute, was smiling and seemingly glad to get out into the air, while Vallon was unruffled in manner.

ROSE CLINGS FEARFULLY TO TWO DETECTIVES.

But Rose as he stepped from the barred doorway halted on the threshold and his eyes sought the surrounding territory before he showed himself. He looked up and down and across the street and then searched with his penetrating gaze the gloomy shadows of the "L" road structure overhead.

At the Criminal Courts Building Rose shrank back when he saw the crowds assembled in the streets. He hung close to two detectives in the walk from the curb through the crowded corridors to the General Sessions courtroom which had been set aside for the use of Coroner Feinberg.

Subpoenas were issued by District Attorney Whitman today for officials of six savings banks: the Dry Dock, the East River, the Emigrant, the Greenwich, the Mt. Morris and the Harlem, who, the District Attorney expects, will testify to deposits by Becker aggregating about $10,000. The deposits, he said, would be in addition to those already discovered. Another subpoena was issued for Thomas McWalters, a contractor at No. 225 Fifth avenue, who built Becker's new home on Olinville avenue, the Bronx.

WALDO DECEIVED FREQUENTLY, WHITMAN IS INFORMED.

In his investigation of affairs in the Police Department District Attorney Whitman has picked up considerable information tending to show that Police Commissioner Waldo has been deceived in many cases by his subordinates. He has been deceived in information tending to show that line was contributed to by two citizens whose names were not made public.

They told the District Attorney that they had occasion to visit Police Headquarters not long ago and complain about a disorderly house. They were received by Commissioner Waldo, who, after listening to their story, he agreed with them that the place should be closed and promised to close it.

The house was not closed and the two citizens made inquiries. They found that Commissioner Waldo, in pursuance of his promise, had called in the inspector of the district in which the house was located and told him of the complaint. The inspector promptly proceeded to minimize the affair, according to the two complaining citizens. Finally, according to their version, when Commissioner Waldo insisted on action the inspector charged that the men who had complained were actuated solely by spite because they had been turned down in an effort to open up a disorderly place of their own.

WHITMAN DECLARES POLICE KNEW WHERE SLAYERS WERE.

The offering of $5,000 reward for the capture of "Lefty Louie" and "Gyp the Blood" came after Mr. Whitman had found the police strangely inactive. The actions of the detectives who allowed Schepps to escape from the Catskills and consequent developments led the District Attorney to give out a remarkable statement in which he openly says he "cannot escape the conclusion that at least some members of the Police Department have known, if they do not know now, the whereabouts of the murderers."

He would rather trust to the cupidity and treachery of the gunmen's friends, in the belief that if a gangster can be hired to commit murder for a hundred dollars, many can be found willing to "sneak" on a pal for twenty times as much.

MAYOR'S NEMESIS, CORRIGAN, WILL AID GRAFT PROBES

Magistrate Will Supply Evidence and Also Cross-Examine Witnesses.

FLYNN ON WAY HOME

Chief Investigator, Borrowed From Uncle Sam, Will Begin Work To-Morrow.

City Magistrate Joseph E. Corrigan, who first made the public charge that the city of New York was "wide open" and that there existed a strong combination between gangsters, gamblers and police, which resulted in a bitter fight with Mayor Gaynor, whom he charged with direct responsibility, has offered to aid the Curran Aldermanic Committee in its investigation of the Police Department. Magistrate Corrigan's offer has been accepted, and it was admitted today that in addition to furnishing a mass of evidence, he would probably attend personally the meetings of the committee and assist Attorney Emory Buckner in cross-examining witnesses.

A special meeting of the Curran Committee will be called for the middle of next week, probably on Wednesday, to ratify the selection of William J. Flynn, chief of the New York division of the United States Secret Service and for several months a Deputy Police Commissioner of New York, to be chief investigator for the Curran Committee, in charge of the corps of private detectives who will work with the committee in uncovering police graft and corruption.

Chief Flynn, who has been loaned to the committee by Secretary of the Treasury MacVean, has been away on his vacation in Maine, but sailed today for New York. He is due here tomorrow night and will immediately confer with Chairman Curran and Attorney Buckner, preparatory to assuming charge of the investigation. Chief Flynn will probably remain for a week or ten days at his desk in the secret on the part of the high city officials. He first made the charge at a meeting of the Calumet Club and later repeated them in his controversy with Mayor Gaynor. He further charged that the police were "wide open" and that they "gave every grafting police captain and inspector an excuse for having his district wide open. All he has to do is to say that without plain clothes men he cannot get evidence on which to make raids."

Magistrate Corrigan said today he was able to prove all the charges he made at the time and that he intended to do so through the medium of the Curran committee.

HAD "GYF THE BLOOD" CAGED, THESE TWO BROOKLYNITES THINK.

In the Erie Basin neighborhood of Brooklyn several cold and steady hands are sorely troubled by the fact that the missing "Gyp the Blood" and the $25,000 reward offered for his capture slip through their fingers to-day. Chief among the mourners are J. Gus Roeder, a Court street saloonkeeper, and Richard Roach of No. 28 Hamilton avenue avenue.

Roach, on leaving home early to-day, found a sad-looking man sitting at a box near Erie Basin. The morose stranger confided to Roach that he was troubled in mind and suffering from want of sleep.

"I have done something," said the stranger, and the police are looking for me. I have a notion to give myself up."

"Ah!" said Roach to himself. "One of the fugitives."

But it did not occur to Roach to leap on the sorrowful stranger and howl for assistance. Instead, he walked away and kept his eye on the supposed fugitive, who made his way to the saloon of Roeder.

In Roeder's saloon the stranger drank much and talked a great deal. The burden of his talk was that his conscience was troubling him and he wanted to give himself up to the police. Roach wanted Roeder to go out and call a policeman, and Roeder wanted Roach to go out and call a policeman, but each was afraid the other would try to claim the whole reward, so they stuck together.

Finally the stranger, after announcing his intention of surrendering forthwith, started up Court street. Roeder trailed along, with Roach bringing up the rear. Near Hamilton avenue the stranger met two men who looked like detectives and vanished with them.

Roeder hung around the neighborhood a while. He says he heard later that the stranger was "Gyp the Blood" and that he had been arrested by two detectives.

"Why didn't you nab him and claim the reward?" Roeder and Roach were asked this afternoon.

"What," they replied, "and have him shoot us?"

The rumor that "Gyp the Blood" had been seen in the Erie Basin neighborhood spread gradually up to Brooklyn Police Headquarters. Detectives George Friday, John Manning and James O'Dea were sent out to make an investigation.

Authors' Feminine Pen-Names. (From the London Chronicle.) The Russian lady who confined her library to the works of women might have been excused if she had admitted one or two books by men inadvertently. For there have been men who disguised their identity under feminine pen-names. Alphonse Daudet, for instance, chose to write as Marie Gaston, and Horace Walpole on occasions signed himself as Susan Crick. Mrs. Hemans was the pen-name first chosen by Theodore Hook, while the Mrs. Horace Mann was at one time written in the Times. Before, and that there "was an astonishing coincidence in conditions

"I WAS FRAMED BY ROSE," SAYS "BIG JACK" ZELIG

"My Friends Would Have Killed Him if I Went Away," He Declares.

"Big Jack" Zelig, ex-convict and gunman, unboomed himself in a confession of innocence to-day when he emerged from the Grand Jury room, where he had testified against Detectives White and Stetner. He said:

"In the first place I want it distinctly understood that I know absolutely nothing about the murder of Herman Rosenthal. If I was not in the predicament I am in at the present time, I would make it a point to find out who did the killing and break his leg for him."

"Herman Rosenthal was my friend. I am convinced by facts that Jack Rose framed me. If I had been sent to prison for fourteen years, as it looked at one time, Rose well knew that my friends would kill him—I mean that they would avenge me."

"Jack" Rose had me bailed out. He and "Bridgie" Webber and Schepps and Harry Vallon put up the money to get me out on $10,000 bail. Jack Rose was scared. It had been rumored around that he was responsible for my arrest. He was interfering with the conduct of my case and with my counsel.

"I didn't know who was trying to bail me out till I was brought over from the Tombs and saw them all in the District Attorney's office. That was on July 2. I didn't care who got me out. I was only too glad to get out. I left the Criminal Courts Building with Schepps in a taxi-cab. I went out of town alone. My case had been set before Judge Malone for July 10 and I returned to the city that morning. Rose went into the house of Detective White cause of the illness of Detective White. I went out of town again and did not return till Tuesday.

"Much has been published about my travelling in company with the fugitives. There is not a word of truth in that."

"You know them, though?" interposed an interviewer.

"I knew them by sight," said Zelig. "I think they are decent chaps compared with this fellow Rose. Rose would hang his own brother to clear his skirts. I know he framed me and I don't think Becker knew anything about the frame-up. I am under no obligations to any of them."

SEAMAN IS DROWNED.

Milton Hicks, twenty-four years of age, a seaman on the schooner "Carrie D. Ware," hailing from Dorchester, Canada, was drowned to-day at the foot of Fox street, Long Island City. The police say he had been drinking and fell off the pier.

hands to any of those unremunerative occupations in which the hands and not the head are hired. Always he was haunted by fear of the law. He heard that his native State had a bank commissioner named Dolley who was relentlessly running down all those who had trifled with the banking laws. Each week he moved from one cheap rooming or boarding house to another. His wife uncomplainingly accompanied him.

Then came the climax to all his hard knocks—the event that resulted in his arrest yesterday. On Tuesday his need for money and sympathy had become unbearable. He hunted up a one-time friend. This friend had a piece of business at
